this book in two volumes breathes fresh air empirically methodologically and theoretically into understanding the rich ceremonial lives the philosophical religious knowledge and the impressive material feats and labor organization that distinguish Hopewell Indians of central Ohio and neighboring regions during the first centuries CE. The first volume defines cross culturally for the first time the ritual drama as a genre of social performance. It reconstructs and compares parts of 14 such dramas that Hopewellian and other Woodland period peoples performed in their ceremonial centers to help the soul-like essences of their deceased make the journey to an afterlife. The second volume builds and critiques ten formal cross cultural models of personhood and the self and infers the nature of Scioto Hopewell people's ontology. Two facets of their ontology are found to have been instrumental in their creating the intercommunity alliances and cooperation and gathering the labor required to construct their huge multicomunity ceremonial centers: a relational collective concept of the self defined by the ethical quality of the relationships one has with other beings and a concept of multiple soul-like essences that compose a human being and can be harnessed strategically to create familial-like ethical bonds of cooperation among individuals and communities. The archaeological reconstructions of Hopewellian ritual dramas and concepts of personhood and the self and of Hopewell people's strategic uses of these are informed by three large surveys of historic Woodland and Plains Indians narratives, ideas and rites about journeys to afterlives, the creatures who inhabit the cosmos and the nature and functions of soul-like essences coupled with rich contextual archaeological and bioarchaeological taphonomic analyses. The bioarchaeological taphonomic method of l'anthropologie de terrain, new to North American archaeology, is introduced and applied in all the research in this book. It vitalizes a vision of an anthropology committed to native logic and motivation and skeptical of the imposition of Western world views and categories onto native peoples.

Politeness is crucial to successful communication and is consequently of great interest to those who study language in its social context. This book presents the first application of Brown and Levinson's ground-breaking theoretical work in a full-length comparative case study. Maria Sifianou draws her data from a variety of sources including literature, particularly drama, questionnaires and personal observation. She attempts to discover the principles underlying social interaction in both intracultural and intercultural contexts and discusses the extent to which the concept of politeness is common to different cultures she argues that politeness is conceptualized differently and thus manifested differently in the two societies under study greeks tend to use more positive politeness devices than the english who prefer more negative devices positive politeness is more closely related to friendliness negative politeness to formality dr sifianou s analysis illustrates and supports the general claim that despite popular stereotypes there can be no objective verification for the view that one nation is more polite than another
